Helping Hands at Hoover Middle School

On Friday March 19th, the Service Learning Group at Hoover Middle School hosted the High Five Booth at The Hoover Spring Fair. The goal of the activity was to create a piece of art to beautify the school and to address school climate by starting conversations among students about having adult allies within the school.

The student-led activity group, which consisted of Saba, Markaela, Rutha, Kaela, and Aaiyan, met consistently once a week for two months to plan ways to improve their school's environment. Through this planning process the girls developed leadership skills and a better understanding of how to organize community service events. They worked hard to plan the booth, put it together, apply for space at the fair, and then introduced the activity at the Hoover Mentor Program's monthly activity the day before the fair. The culmination of their hard work was when they spent all day during the Spring Fair collecting handprints and holding conversations with peers about what it means to have an adult ally at school. The experience gave all participating students the chance to hear about the hundreds of student-adult connections that exist at the school.

They collected enough handprints for five canvases, which will now be displayed in the school along with some of the responses that were collected.
